

Although the pandemic has been a boon for several of our Health Care companies, Alcon, unfortunately, has not been among them. Alcon makes vision care products and equipment for ophthalmological surgery. The ongoing pandemic has led to postponements of many non-urgent surgical procedures, including those ophthalmological procedures which utilize Alcon equipment and consumables. However, unlike other changes wrought by the coronavirus, we believe these deferrals are unlikely to become permanent; cataract sufferers' conditions will not improve without surgery and others awaiting vision correction procedures are unlikely to postpone indefinitely. Alcon's vision care business has performed relatively better as home-bound customers have stocked up on contact lenses and other eye products, even if the most recent earnings showed this temporary boost to vision care sales slowing some due to continued declines in eye appointments (which hurt sales of contact lenses reliant on new prescriptions). Ultimately, the competitive structure of the ophthalmic industry remains attractive because its concentration—the top three companies represent ~60% of revenue—results in low rivalry and its long-term growth prospects are supported by aging populations. Meanwhile, Alcon is strong enough financially to endure an extended period of business disruption.

BENCHMARK PERFORMANCE BY SECTOR – AUGUST

- Consumer Discretionary was the best-performing sector, led by shares of automotive companies. Toyota maintained profitability despite a sharp decline in sales this year and reported improving demand, fueling optimism.
- Utilities was the lone declining sector amid continued preference for growth stocks.

BENCHMARK PERFORMANCE BY GEOGRAPHY – AUGUST

- Japan was the best-performing market. New economic data showed business investment remained stable, positioning Japanese companies well for eventual recovery in global demand.
- Gains in UK stocks trailed those of the benchmark as negotiations over the terms of the country's exit from the EU stalled, increasing the odds it will leave without a trade deal.

PERFORMANCE ATTRIBUTION BY SECTOR – AUGUST

- Positive stock selection boosted Communication Services due to strong gains in shares of Russian Internet company Yandex, which reported improving search advertising demand and better-than-expected margins in its taxi business.
- Stock selection detracted in Consumer Staples as Brazilian brewer Ambev reported lower margins resulting from its move to ramp up volumes in a bid against rival Heineken for greater market share.

PERFORMANCE ATTRIBUTION BY GEOGRAPHY – AUGUST

- Positive stock selection in Pacific ex-Japan was led by Hong Kong-based insurer AIA Group, which saw an increase in new business across Asian markets as economies reopened.
- Weak stocks in Japan dragged on relative returns. Unicharm's stock declined after management shared a disappointing outlook due to supply issues in India following a fire at its disposable diaper factories there.
