

COVID-19 has affected consumers' purchasing and consumption habits, increasing advertisers' need for up-to-date data on their behavior. UK-based market research firm YouGov delivers such information, based on online survey responses from proprietary panels drawn from a standing pool of over 9 million people in key markets around the world. The phasing out over the next two years of Google's third-party cookies and Apple's identifier for advertisers should increase advertisers' demand for timely and reliable regulatory-compliant data that can be used to make up for the decreasing availability of real-time consumer tracking data. In addition to these tailwinds, the company should also receive a boost from the upcoming US election. Although political polling is now a relatively smaller part of its business, each busy political season does bring a temporary jolt to revenue, and sizeable lift in visibility. Its CBS/YouGov Battleground Tracker is likely to be one of the more closely watched polls heading into November, especially given how important online polling has become in learning voters' true leanings, given respondents' growing reticence in traditional phone interviews.
